Adam K. Brody is an associate in Moses Singer's Litigation practice group. Adam represents clients facing criminal prosecutions and regulatory enforcement actions. He represented the first defendant to be sentenced in federal court for fraud in connection with the marketing and sale of non-fungible tokens ("NFTs"), persuading the Court to impose a non-jail sentence for an alleged $3 million scam. He has also represented financial institutions and individuals in SEC and FINRA investigations, as well as investigations by federal, state, and local prosecutors. Adam also represents clients in a range of commercial and employment disputes, including breach-of-contract actions, discrimination claims, and other matters.

Adam served as a law clerk to the Honorable Henry B. Pitman in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Before his clerkship, Adam was an Assistant District Attorney at the Queens District Attorney's Office for six years. He investigated and prosecuted hundreds of criminal cases, including dozens of violent felonies, and worked jointly on cases with prosecutors in the U.S. Attorney's Offices for the Southern and Eastern Districts of New York. He tried 16 cases to verdict, including twelve felony jury trials, and briefed and argued several appeals before New York's appellate courts.
